

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A shallow area of low pressure will track north across Northern Ireland this afternoon. It will bring with it the risk of scattered showers this afternoon and evening. Although many of these will be light isolated heavy showers are possible and, combined with already saturated ground, there is a low risk of localised surface water flooding.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 15:00 on Mon, 02nd Jul 2012 until 20:00 on Mon, 02nd Jul 2012

Scattered, possibly thundery, showers are expected to develop this afternoon and evening. Although many places will escape the heaviest showers there is a low risk that one or two could be heavy enough to lead to very localised surface water flooding.
